

MOUNTAIN MOMENTS

Hospice underneath the Felbertauern
Did you know, that the Matreier Tauernhaus was mentioned for the first time in 1207.

The so called „Tauernhäuser“ (shelters or mountain huts in the area of the Tauern massif) were built at the feet of important pass crossings. The sense and purpose of these shelter huts was to reduce the duration of the exhausting passage (in this case up on the Felbertauern at a height of 2.498 m) to a minimum in order to avoid heavy and long distances without any possibility of finding an adequate resting and restoring place. It can be assumed that such shelters and hospices were established already in times of the ancient Romans. These were the places, where people who guided the pack animals were able to eat, rest and feed the pack horses. For the service rendered the host of the Tauernhaus received a commission in kind and later on in money. The inhabitants of Tyrol and Salzburg have always fostered and maintained the contact and exchange with other regions and cultures. Many members of alpine communities were originally farmers and guides who accompanied pack-animal trains. They can be considered the first freight forwarders in the Alps. For centuries they carried their goods - salt, wine, schnapps, and also gold and silver on the back of very strong horses, mainly the breeding of Noriker and Haflinger, to get them across the dangerous mountain barriers of the Alps. The passage on this very place in the Tauern mountains has been used since the Bronze Age (1200 - 1000 BC). Around the year 1150 the trading between the Alpine and the Italian regions was at its peak and thus extremely flourishing. The passage of the Felbertauern was first mentioned in 1287 as „Velber Thaur“. In the years between 1300 and 1550 it was frequented the most. Between 1700 and 1800 there was a regular postal traffic from Mittersill to Windisch-Matrei. The construction of railway lines from the beginning of the 19th century meant the end of the trading route thus also of the horse guides and travelling salesmen.
